PREFACE

This booklet is the eighteenth revision of a syllabus that has been distributed to my Columbia classes on scholarly editing since the first one in the spring of 1981. The first three sections of the Appendix (Parts 6-8 below) were originally designed as a supplement to my essay in The Center for Scholarly Editions: An Introductory Statement (Modern Language Association of America, 1977), which treated the literature of the field through 1976. In 1990, that portion of the syllabus was distributed by the Committee on Scholarly Editions under the title An Interim Supplement to "The Center for Scholarly Editions: An Introductory Statement" (1977), and annual revisions of the Interim Supplement (gradually including more parts of the syllabus) were distributed by the Committee over the next six years (the last being A Seventh Interim Supplement, dated 1996). For the seventeenth revision (1998) of the syllabus, the books and articles mentioned in my 1977 essay were incorporated into Parts 6-8. Because the result was no longer merely supplementary, it was made more widely available as a publication of the Book Arts Press, which is now publishing the latest revision. (From 1990 on, the Book Arts Press has also published the successive revisions of the syllabus for my companion course on descriptive and analytical bibliography and the history of the book, under the title Introduction to Bibliography: Seminar Syllabus.)

Parts 1-5 are selective lists of suggested readings that collectively provide an introduction to the activity and traditions of scholarly editing. The first two offer two kinds of selections from the fuller lists in the Appendix: Part 1 consists of recommended initial readings on each basic step in the process of producing a scholarly edition; Part 2, more historical in approach, is a gathering of some of the more significant writings from the long history of textual criticism. Parts 3-5 are selections from other relevant categories of material, not in general covered in the Appendix: examples of the writings about punctuation, spelling, and other visual aspects of texts; examples of English-language scholarly editions and procedural manuals produced by the staffs of such editions; and examples of noteworthy reviews of scholarly editions.

In contrast to these highly selective lists, the Appendix attempts to provide a considerably more comprehensive record of the literature of textual criticism and scholarly editing. Although it ranges broadly, its focus is on twentieth-century writings in English that have general theoretical or methodological significance. (It therefore excludes--with some exceptions--the works that concentrate on the textual problems in individual authors or assess particular editions; some guides to that material are mentioned in Part 2, section G.) Parts 6-7 list chronologically the writings on theory and practice, divided into two sections roughly according to whether the works treated are pre-Renaissance (the primary witnesses to which are frequently manuscripts not contemporaneous with the authors) or post-medieval (generally attested to by manuscripts and printed books contemporaneous with the authors). (Many of the writings of general significance, however, are noted only in Part 7; and many of the discussions of manuscript texts listed in Part 6 are relevant to work in later periods as well.) Part 8 reports the beginnings of a rapidly expanding literature, that dealing with the use of computers in textual work. Part 9, on the analysis of manufacturing clues in the objects bearing verbal texts, is reprinted (with revisions) from the other syllabus because much of the work in analytical bibliography has been motivated by textual concerns and because bibliographical analysis--though not limited in its usefulness to textual research--is an integral part of the process of investigating textual histories. (Of course, an editor needs to draw on knowledge of all the aspects of book history covered in the other syllabus.)

The aim of my course is to provide an introduction to the rationale and procedures of preparing scholarly editions; the syllabus is meant to supply short lists of recommended readings, supplemented by more extensive unevaluative chronological lists, which students are encouraged to browse in as a way of gaining a sense of the development and literature of the field. Although the preponderance of the materials cited are in English, many of them make reference to literatures in other languages; and the syllabus can serve as a guide to treatments of principles and procedures that are applicable to the editing of writings from any period or country. This latest version of the syllabus is reproduced here in the form in which it was distributed to my class; it is thus presented as a working document, which it was intended to be, and has not been subjected to the kind of systematic checking and reconsideration that would underlie a more formal publication.

Journals: articles on editing also regularly appear in The Library (The Bibliographical Society, London), Papers of the Bibliographical Society of America, Bibliographical Society of Australia and New Zealand Bulletin, Documentary Editing (Association for Documentary Editing), and Genesis: Revue internationale de critique génétique (Institut des Textes et Manuscrits Modernes, Centre Nationale de la Recherche Scientifique, 1992-).

G. Further Listings

Many additional writings on textual criticism and editing are listed in Parts 6 and 7 below. For a comprehensive record of material relating to British authors, see T.H. Howard-Hill, Shakespearian Bibliography and Textual Criticism: A Bibliography (1971, 2000); British Bibliography and Textual Criticism: A Bibliography (1979); British Bibliography and Textual Criticism: A Bibliography (Authors) (1979); British Literary Bibliography, 1970-1979: A Bibliography (1992); and British Literary Bibliography, 1980-1989: A Bibliography (1999). (Other useful Shakespeare checklists are Gordon Ross Smith's "Text Transmission and Emendation" in A Classified Shakespeare Bibliography 1936-1958 [1963], pp.111-51, and James G. McManaway and Jeanne Addison Roberts, A Selective Bibliography of Shakespeare: Editions, Textual Studies, Commentary [1975].) A sizable checklist that includes some references to work in classical and biblical textual criticism, as well as the textual criticism of writings in the modern languages, is part of the "Selected Bibliography" for D.C. Greetham's Textual Scholarship: An Introduction (1992), pp. 466-503 (which also contains a generous list of "Some Representative Scholarly Editions," pp. 485-96); in the 1994 printing these lists are expanded to pp. 472-526 and pp. 500-13 respectively. For similar coverage, see also the listings at the ends of chapters in Scholarly Editing: A Guide to Research (1995), ed. Greetham; and see William Baker and Kenneth Womack, Twentieth-Century Bibliography and Textual Criticism: An Annotated Bibliography (2000). Listings that deal with the textual criticism of pre-Renaissance manuscript material are Bruce M. Metzger's Annotated Bibliography of the Textual Criticism of the New Testament, 1914-1939 (1955), Laurel N. Braswell's Western Manuscripts from Classical Antiquity to the Renaissance: A Handbook (1981), Leonard E. Boyle's "Textual Setting" in his Medieval Latin Palaeography: A Bibliographical Introduction (1984), pp. 286-316, and Thomas P. Halton's Classical Scholarship: An Annotated Bibliography (1986). A substantial checklist (well indexed by subject) of material in English concerned with post-medieval writings is Beth Luey (with Kathleen Gorman), Editing Documents and Texts: An Annotated Bibliography (1990); a more specialized list is Jeremy Lopez's "An Annotated Bibliography of Textual Scholarship in [non-Shakespearean] Elizabethan Drama, 1973-1998," Research Opportunities in Renaissance Drama 39 (2000): 17-76. For studies of the textual problems in particular authors and works, see David Madden and Richard Powers, Writers' Revisions: An Annotated Bibliography of Articles and Books about Writers' Revisions and Their Comments on the Creative Process (1981); D.C. Greetham, "Selected Anglophone Textual Criticism of Individual Authors or Works," in his Textual Scholarship: An Introduction (1992, 1994), pp. 488-93 [1994]; and Graham Falconer and David H. Sanderson, "Bibliographie des études génétiques littéraires," Texte 7 (1988): 287-352. An extensive listing of textual work relevant to literature in the Romance languages appears in Romance Philology 45 (1991): 206-36; for German literature, see Waltraud Hagen et al., Handbuch der Editionen (1979, 1981), and Rainer Schmitz, Bibliographisches Handbuch der Editions-wissenschaft im Bereich der Neugermanistik (forthcoming). Annual records of current publications (including editions themselves) appear in the Modern Humanities Research Association's Annual Bibliography of English Language and Literature (especially useful is the "Textual Studies" section), the MLA International Bibliography, The Year's Work in English Studies, and Shakespeare Survey; less extensive current listings can be found in Documentary Editing, Editio, and the Newsletter of the Association for Textual Scholarship in Art History.
